Calendar Sync

Sync with Google, Outlook, and Apple calendars, multiple at the same time.

Website Embed

Embed booking calendar directly on your site.

Embed social content

Add feed from insta, fb, linkedin, youtube, tiktok, etc.

Team Scheduling

Complete suite for scheduling as a team.

Group Bookings

Allow multiple attendees to join classes, webinars, or sessions.

Images and Videos

Add content like images or videos to your booking page.

Notice Period

Set minimum time required for booking in advance.

Manual Booking Approval

Option to approve or reject bookings before confirming them.

Round Robin Allocation

Distribute meetings evenly across the team.

Booking questions

Customizable pre-booking questions on scheduling page

Collective scheduling

Allow guests to book time when all team members are available.

Custom availability

Customize availability for specific days to manage availability exceptions

lunacal.ai

Industries Pricing Inspirations Wall of Love Resources

Book a Demo Login

Full-suite of features, one simple tool

Automated Reminders
Send automated SMS and email reminders for meetings.

Booking Links
Generate shareable links to schedule appointments.

Workflows
Send multi-step emails before, during, and after meetings.

Buffers
Add breathing space to prevent back-to-back bookings.

Calendar Sync
Sync with Google, Outlook, and Apple calendars, multiple at the same time.

Website Embed
Embed booking calendar directly on your site.

Embed social content
Add feed from insta, fb, linkedin, youtube, tiktok, etc.

Team Scheduling
Complete suite for scheduling as a team.

Multi-Location & Multi-Service

Manage multiple business locations or service categories easily.

Custom Domain

Use your own domain for a fully branded scheduling experience.

Paid Bookings

Collect payments directly via Stripe or PayPal. Lunacal charges 0% commission.

Coupons & Discounts

Offer promotional codes and special pricing for your clients.

Landing Page

Add your profile, FAQs, company details, and more on the scheduling page.

GDPR Compliant

Built with full compliance for secure data handling and privacy.

Languages

13+ languages (Eng., Spanish, German, French, Portuguese, Dutch, etc.

Integrations

Integrate using zapier, webhooks, CRM (hubspot, pipedrive) etc.

lunacal.ai

Industries Pricing Inspirations Wall of Love Resources Login

Scheduling Software for Real Estate Agents

Showing + consult routing with lead qualification, travel buffers, timezone-safe booking, team handoffs, reminders, calendar sync, & quick reschedules.

Sign Up for free

Go live in two minutes

4.9/5 5/5 4.8/5

Scheduling features for showings, buyers,

lunacal.ai

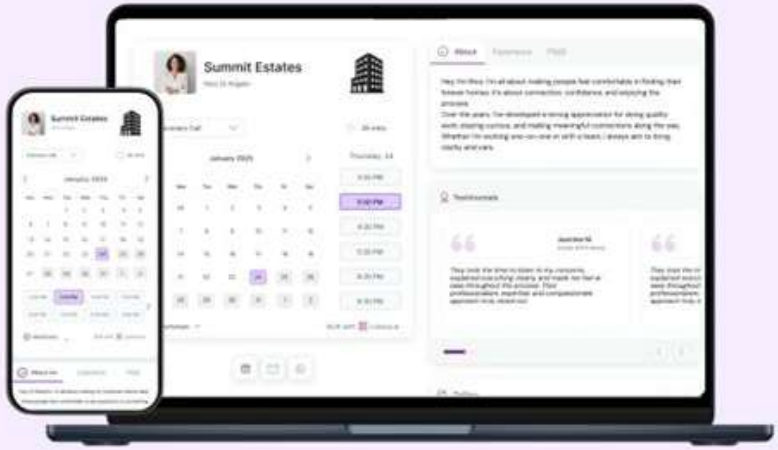
Industries Pricing Inspirations Wall of Love Resources Login

Scheduling features for showings, buyers, and sellers

Booking | Marketing | Booking questions | Reminders | Payment | Multi-location | Multiple services | Round-rob

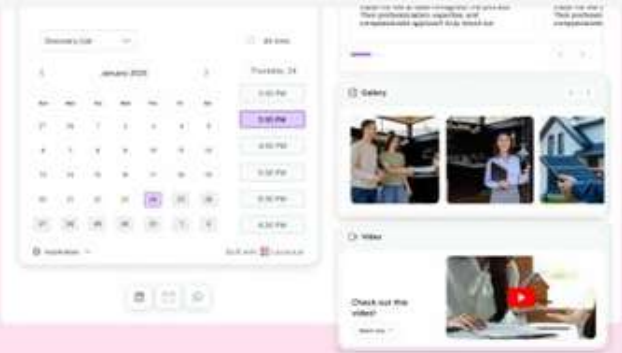
Let buyers book showings fast, without phone-tag

Make booking instant and predictable. People browse listings at odd hours, then forget by morning. A real estate appointment scheduling flow lets them pick a slot, confirms instantly, and blocks your calendar. Include practical options like "virtual tour" vs "in-person", and set travel buffers so back-to-back showings don't wreck your day.



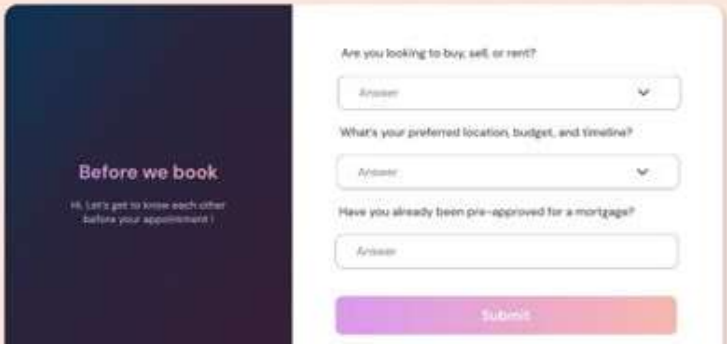
Turn the booking page into a mini listing pitch

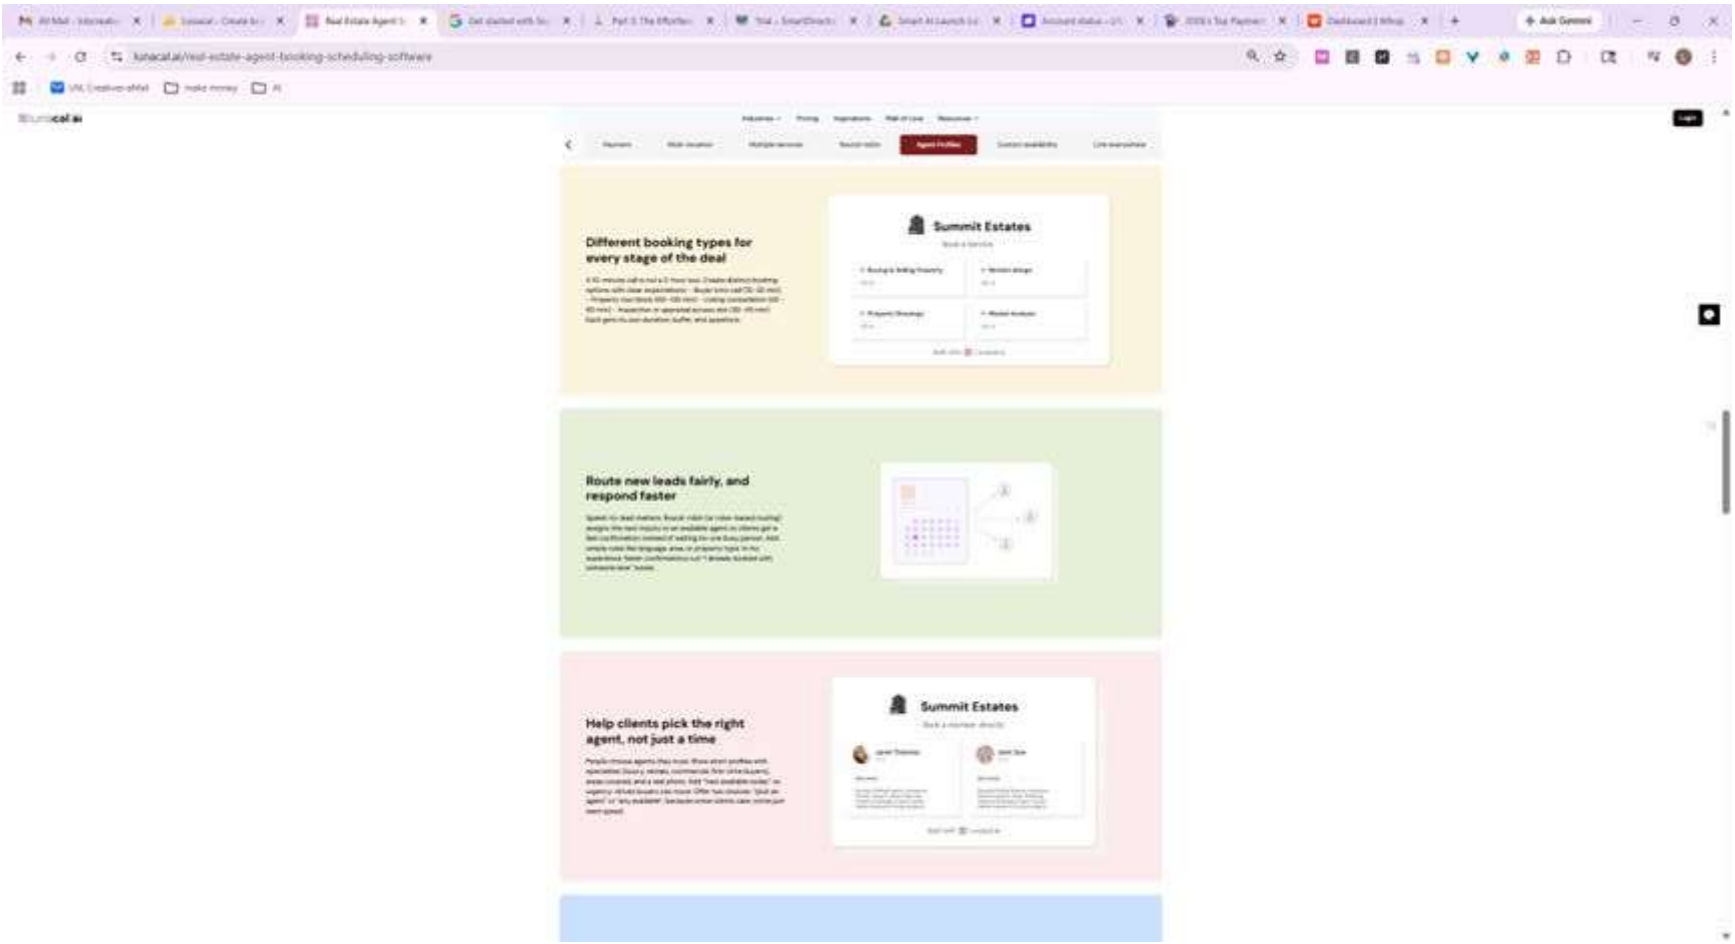
Your booking page should pre-sell the showing. Add the basics buyers ask anyway: neighborhood highlights, commute notes, nearby schools, property video, and what makes this listing different. For sellers, show your process (pricing, staging, marketing plan). It should feel like booking time with a specialist, not just grabbing a slot.



Pre-qualify and prep before you step out

Ask the questions that stop wasted showings. Keep it short but meaningful so you can prepare the right route and shortlist. Collect: - Buyer type (first-time, upgrade, investor) - Timeline and financing status (pre-approval or cash) - Must-haves (beds, parking, pet-friendly, elevator) - Who is attending and preferred language This saves hours and makes you look sharp.





Different booking types for every stage of the deal
Summit Estates
Route new leads fairly, and respond faster
Help clients pick the right agent, not just a time
Summit Estates

lunacal.ai/real-estate-agent-booking-scheduling-software

lunacal.ai

Reduce no-shows with location, access, and safety details

Take consult fees or retainers without awkwardness

Handle showings across neighborhoods, cities, and time zones

Summit Estates

lunacal.ai

Industries | Pricing | Inspirations | Wall of Love | Resources | Login

Payment | Multi-location | Multiple services | Round-robin | Agent Profiles | Custom availability | Link everywhere

Stay flexible around closings, inspections, and surprises

Your calendar needs to adapt to real deal flow. Block time for closings, lender calls, inspections, and last-minute seller requests. Use minimum notice so you don't get a same-hour booking when you're already on-site somewhere. Add working-hour rules for weekends and evenings, since many buyers can only view outside 9-to-5.

Put the booking link where intent already exists

Meet clients where they discover you. Add your realtor booking link to listing pages, email signatures, WhatsApp/iMessage templates, social bios, and QR codes on yard signs or flyers. Use different links for different intents (buyer consult vs showing request) so people land on the right booking type immediately. Convenience turns curiosity into action.

No commission, No license fees.

Just simple, fair pricing

Monthly | Yearly (Save Upto 20%)

Standard	Teams	Enterprise
$9/user/month	$15/user/month	$25/user/month
For professionals	For growing businesses	For large companies
Unlimited events	All standard features	All teams features
Payment and Zapier integration	Teams scheduling page	Account manager
Priority Support	Round robin scheduling	Custom integrations
	Collective scheduling	Phone Support

lunacal.ai/real-estate-agent-booking-scheduling-software

lunacal.ai

No commission, No license fees.

Just simple, fair pricing

Standard	Teams	Enterprise
$10/user/month	$15/user/month	$30/user/month

Related scheduling apps

Real Estate Agent Scheduling Playbook

This playbook helps you set up real estate appointment booking so leads don't ghost, showings don't collide, and your calendar stops running your life.

Design your "appointment menu" like a real agent

Most real estate agent scheduling software fails when every meeting is treated the same. Start by separating the appointments that need different prep, travel, and decision-makers.

Frequently Asked Questions

Authored & Reviewed by:

Design your "appointment menu" like a real agent

Most real estate agent scheduling software fails when every meeting is treated the same. Start by separating the appointments that need different prep, travel, and decision-makers.

- Buyer consultation (first call) versus buyer showing (in-person)
- Listing consultation versus seller follow-up (pricing, staging, paperwork)
- Offer strategy call, inspection follow-up, appraisal call, closing coordination
- Open house slots (time-window blocks), not 1:1 meetings

Qualify before you give away prime slots

You don't need a "long form." You need the few answers that stop mismatched meetings and wasted driving. Put this directly in your real estate appointment booking flow.

- Are you buying, selling, or both? Desired timeline.
- Preferred neighborhoods or commute constraints.
- Budget range or price expectation (optional but useful)
- Financing status: cash, pre-approved, speaking to a lender, not started.
- Who will attend: decision-maker(s) only, or also family/partners.

Use scheduling rules that match fieldwork, not deskwork

Real estate scheduling is not "back-to-back Zoom calls." Your rules should protect blocks for travel, prep, and follow-ups.

- Set different availability for in-person showings versus virtual calls.
- Keep "deep work" blocks for CMAs, listing decks, and negotiation windows.
- Cap daily showings (yes, cap them) so quality stays high.
- Add minimum notice periods so you're not sprinting across town in 30 minutes.

Make travel time a first-class citizen

Clients will happily book a showing across the city right after a showing on the other side. Your system shouldn't allow that.

- Build buffers between in-person appointments for travel and parking.
- Create location-based booking notes: "Meeting point," "unit access," "gate code," "parking instructions."
- If you serve multiple areas, split availability by region (or dedicate days to zones).
- For global audiences: include timezone-safe confirmations for virtual consults.

Route meetings based on intent and urgency

This is the part that makes you rank above generic blogs: real lead routing is what agents actually need. "One calendar link" is not enough for teams.

- Buyers within 30 days get priority slots; long-horizon buyers get standard slots.
- Seller leads requesting a pricing conversation get routed to listing specialists.
- High-intent leads (pre-approved, specific address, urgent timeline) can skip straight to a tighter calendar.
- New leads can start with a shorter call, then unlock showings after qualification.

Reduce no-shows with confirmation content that feels professional

Real estate no-shows often happen because the client isn't sure what the meeting is for, where it is, or what to bring. Fix that at booking.

- Auto-send the agenda "what we'll cover" in 3–5 lines.
- Include meeting mode clearly: phone, video, office, property address.
- For showings: include ID requirements, access notes, and a "for on time" line.
- Include a reschedule link that works on mobile, because that's where most clients live.

Build "showing blocks" instead of letting clients pick random times

If you do showings, letting clients freely pick any time creates chaos. A better pattern is controlled windows.

This playbook helps you set up real estate appointment booking so leads don’t ghost, showings don’t collide, and your calendar stops running your life.

Design your “appointment menu” like a real agent

Most real estate agent scheduling software fails when every meeting is treated the same. Start by separating the appointments that need different prep, travel, and decision-makers.

Buyer consultation (first call) versus buyer showing (in-person).
Listing consultation versus seller follow-up (pricing, staging, paperwork).
Offer strategy call, inspection follow-up, appraisal call, closing coordination.
Open house slots (time-window blocks), not 1:1 meetings.

Qualify before you give away prime slots

You don’t need a “long form.” You need the few answers that stop mismatched meetings and wasted driving. Put this directly in your real estate appointment booking flow.

Are you buying, selling, or both? Desired timeline.
Preferred neighborhoods or commute constraints.
Budget range or price expectation (optional but useful).
Financing status: cash, pre-approved, speaking to a lender, not started.
Who will attend: decision-maker(s) only, or also family/partners.

Use scheduling rules that match fieldwork, not deskwork

Real estate scheduling is not “back-to-back Zoom calls.” Your rules should protect blocks for travel, prep, and follow-ups.

Set different availability for in-person showings versus virtual calls.
Keep “deep work” blocks for CMAs, listing decks, and negotiation windows.
Cap daily showings (yes, cap them) so quality stays high.
Add minimum notice periods so you’re not sprinting across town in 30 minutes.

Make travel time a first-class citizen
Clients will happily book a showing across the city right after a showing on the other side. Your system shouldn’t allow that.

Build buffers between in-person appointments for travel and parking.
Create location-based booking notes: “Meeting point,” “unit access,” “gate code,” “parking instructions.”
If you serve multiple areas, split availability by region (or dedicate days to zones).
For global audiences: include timezone-safe confirmations for virtual consults.

Route meetings based on intent and urgency
This is the part that makes you rank above generic blogs: real lead routing is what agents actually need. “One calendar link” is not enough for teams.

Make travel time a first-class citizen

Clients will happily book a showing across the city right after a showing on the other side. Your system shouldn't allow that.

Build buffers between in-person appointments for travel and parking.

Create location-based booking notes: "Meeting point," "unit access," "gate code," "parking instructions."

If you serve multiple areas, split availability by region (or dedicate days to zones).

For global audiences: include timezone-safe confirmations for virtual consults.

Route meetings based on intent and urgency

This is the part that makes you rank above generic blogs: real lead routing is what agents actually need. "One calendar link" is not enough for teams.

Buyers within 30 days get priority slots; long-horizon buyers get standard slots.
Seller leads requesting a pricing conversation get routed to listing specialists.
High-intent leads (pre-approved, specific address, urgent timeline) can skip straight to a tighter calendar.
New leads can start with a shorter call, then unlock showings after qualification.

Reduce no-shows with confirmation content that feels professional
Real estate no-shows often happen because the client isn't sure what the meeting is for, where it is, or what to bring. Fix that at booking.

Auto-send the agenda: "what we'll cover" in 3–5 lines.
Include meeting mode clearly: phone, video, office, property address.
For showings: include ID requirements, access notes, and a "be on time" line.
Include a reschedule link that works on mobile, because that's where most clients live.

Build "showing blocks" instead of letting clients pick random times
If you do showings, letting clients freely pick any time creates chaos. A better pattern is controlled windows.

Create showing windows like "Saturday Showings (2-hour block)" and then confirm the exact property order after.
Or offer fixed showing start times that align with your route planning (for example, top of the hour only).
Keep a separate "same-day showing request" option that triggers a quick approval workflow.

Use team scheduling rules that don't create internal conflict
If you're a brokerage team, "round-robin" alone can be a mess. Real estate teams need fairness and context.

Round-robin only for new inbound leads; route repeat clients back to the same agent.
Make coverage rules explicit: weekends, evenings, vacation coverage, time-off protection.
Lock certain meeting types to certain roles (listing consults to listing agents, showing assistants to showings).
Ensure notes collected at booking are visible to the assigned agent instantly.

Track lead source without annoying the client
Real estate agent scheduling software should help you learn which channels actually produce serious clients, without asking invasive questions.

Add a simple “How did you find me?” field (referral, Instagram, Google, portal, signboard, other).
Store UTM/source data automatically if the booking link comes from ads or campaigns.
Tag bookings by appointment type so you can see what converts into transactions.

Copy-paste templates that make your booking flow feel premium
These small lines reduce confusion and protect your time, especially for first-time buyers and sellers.

Buyer consult intro: “We’ll clarify your timeline, budget range, preferred areas, and next steps so you leave with a plan.”
Showing expectations: “Please arrive on time. If you’re more than 10 minutes late, we may need to reschedule to respect access windows and other appointments.”
Reschedule nudge: “If your schedule changes, please use the reschedule link instead of replying to the confirmation message.”
What to prepare: “If you have a lender pre-approval letter or a target monthly budget, bring it. If not, no stress, we’ll cover options.”